

VIRTUAL HIRING BUSINESS CONTINUITY PLAN

Digital business and technology leaders had to support their organizations moving to virtual hiring overnight amid the COVID-19 pandemic. Some of those early video choices, made out of necessity, not enough to support businesses efficiently in the months and years ahead.

You likely have a Business Continuity Plan (BCP) for everything - but hiring is a new area to be considered when face-to-face interviews are just not possible.

Security is a top priority and some popular video options, like Zoom, failed the enterprise security litmus test.

Other meeting software is being deployed because it is more secure and already integrates into the organization, but it doesn't help with applicant volume and selecting the right candidates. With the first employer talent market in a decade, applicant volumes are surging. Companies are struggling to find the right candidates and get them through the interview process at the speed required to maintain business continuity. An interview is not just another video meeting. Offering an engaging experience for candidates is an important consideration.
